1. Introduction

Language acquisition is the process of learning your native language or foreign language and internalizing them into your own language system. Language is a means of communication, and it is one of the important characteristics of human beings that they use language as a tool to share ideas, knowledge, and feelings with others. For this reason, as soon as babies are born, they learn their native language in a natural setting. It has been observed that language acquisition process roots in behavioral and cognitive mechanisms and surprisingly, the complex language system is relatively easy to learn in a very short period of time.

In addition, it is common to learn or acquire a second language, that is, a foreign language, after the first language is acquired or almost at the same time. The second language acquisition process appears to be arguably different from the first language acquisition process, particularly when people learn a second language in an instructional setting. Thus, second language acquisition gives us somewhat different insights to language acquisition in general.

In this course, we will examine how children develop their native language as well as how children or adults learn a second language. We will also explore the nature of human being through discussion of linguistic characteristics along with the inherent biological and cognitive aspects of human beings.

2. Course Objectives

This course is designed to provide an initial study of language acquisition by focusing on the sequence and process of typical communication development in children. Topics include theories of language development, the sequential acquisition of the major components of language, variables affecting language acquisition, and universal features of language acquisition. This course also covers issues in second language acquisition, focusing on second language teaching and learning mechanisms, in order to get students to think over effective ways of learning a foreign language.

3. Class types and activities

We will have lecture-based classes accompanied by live and active discussions and problem solving activities.

This is an upper level course, and as a result, professional behavior and classroom decorum is expected. Students should be on time for class and assignments turned in on time. Discussion during class should be respectful and courteous. Debate of issues will be promoted using the motto "Be hard on the issues and soft on people."

Use of cell phones, text messaging devices, headphones, and similar technology will not be allowed during class instructional activities. In order to promote an atmosphere conducive to learning, a student may be asked to leave should there be an incident relating to any of these or similar items. At any time during the semester, inappropriate usage of laptop/computers (i.e. checking email, accessing social networking sites, surfing the internet, etc...) can result in banning laptop/computer usage for the remainder of the semester. This is at the sole discretion of the instructor. Cell phones and computer devices will not be permitted on your desk or within view during quizzes and examinations. Likewise, hats, visors, sunglasses, scarves, and similar apparel will not be allowed during quizzes or examinations.
