1. Introduction

The mass media play a key role in modern democracies. Citizens receive most of their political information from the mass media. Politicians also read the public through the mass media. This course provides an overview of the relationship between the mass media and politics. Students learn basic concepts and theories about political behavior including political communication. Several major questions are addressed in this course. First, what is the role of the mass media in democracy? Scholars suggest that the mass media perform specific functions in society. Students discuss the functions in class. Second, how do the mass/news media make news? There are multiple theories of news making. These theories are introduced and critically reviewed in this course. Third, do the news media affect the public? One of the major topics of this course is media effects. Students learn various media effects on political behavior. Fourth, do political elites use the news media? Political elites utilize the mass media for their interests. In particular, this course focuses on how political elites use the mass media during electoral campaigns. Finally, students will discuss the effects of new media on politics. The emergence of new media is an important topic in political communication. Students discuss the effects of new media on the public and political elites.
